MARCH 2005

SPARKS' PERSPECTIVE

Ron Sparks Commissioner

One of the most important improvements made in recent years at the Department of Agriculture & Industries (ADAI) has been the effort to rejuvenate and modernize the department's Information Technology (IT) infrastructure. This is no easy task, as it involves large investments in personnel, hardware, and software.

When the IT modernization program was initiated in 2003, the IT Section was practically non-existent consisting of three employees working to maintain an old computer network. There was no organized plan for developing our capabilities within the department. The main server was over five years old, well above its life expectancy.

I had the opportunity to see the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry's Pesticide Management System as a guest of Louisiana's Commissioner, Bob Odem. The modern features built into their system were impressive. We were able to work out an agreement with Louisiana for them to donate the system to the ADAI as a cooperative gesture. This became a key point in the department's efforts to modernize its IT infrastructure and provided a direction for building a new IT Section.

A project plan was created that included a visit to Louisiana for an evaluation of their system. The results were positive, and we agreed to accept and install the new system onto the ADAI's computer network.

Next, new equipment had to be purchased. It was decided to duplicate Louisiana's hardware and software environment to minimize problems. This equipment would build a state-of-the-art network.

No project goes without problems or challenges. Not far into the project, our old server crashed and forced the project team into a month-long recovery effort to purchase and install a new server ahead of schedule. Plans are back on schedule to install the Louisiana system onto Alabama's new computer network by March 1.

In addition to the adoption of the Pesticide Management System, other progressive changes are being planned for the modernized IT capability of the ADAI. Four new IT employees are scheduled to be hired within the next two months. Plans are in place to install GIS software and to train department employees on the use of "ARCVIEW" mapping software. GIS is a set of software programs that allow users to create detailed maps and apply overlays for certain details. For example, using GIS the department could go to a site (a farm) where a disease was discovered and use a Global Positioning Satellite device to get a location of the farm in terms of longitude and latitude. This location could then be loaded into a GIS program such as "ARCVIEW" and a circle could be drawn on a map with a ten mile radius around the infected farm and farm locations could also be mapped within that ten mile radius. The ADAI could then send out

Ocean Favour Loaded with Alabama Soybeans Headed to Cuba

Commissioner Ron Sparks was in Mobile to observe the loading of Alabama soybeans onto the vessel the Ocean Favour, which will be shipped to Cuba. This shipment is the third that will be sent to the island country since the recent contract negotiations between Alabama agri-businesses and Alimport, Cuba's official trade representative.

"This shipment of soybeans represents the first of

National Ag Day - March 20, 2005

The face of American agriculture is changing - more rapidly now than ever before. From a team of horses and a good memory in the early 1900s to tractors with the power of 40 to 300 horses and computers with spreadsheets today, American farmers provide consumers with better quality food at a lower price. U.S. consumers spend roughly 9% of their income on food compared with 11% in the United Kingdom, 17% in Japan, 27% in South Africa and 53% in India.

The agricultural industry has become increasingly sophisticated and efficient. Today's farmers work nearly three-and-one-half times more land than their predecessors from 1900 and one farmer now supplies food for more than 130 people in the U. S. and abroad compared with just 25.8 people in 1960.

Farmers use computer and satellite technology to map their fields for production inputs. This increases yields and reduces crop inputs like fertilizer and crop protection chemicals. With today's technology, farmers are better able to match seed characteristics and production practices to soil type and climate conditions. The result is higher yields with lower input costs from more efficient use of chemicals, fertilizers and tillage. Ultimately, that results in more food at a lower cost for consumers.

March 20 marks the first day of spring and National Ag Day. A time when producers, ag associations, universities, government agencies and countless others gather to recognize and celebrate the abundance provided by agriculture. By far, the most effective part of this program is the role you play in helping "spread the word." A few generations ago, most Americans were directly involved in -or had relatives involved in- agricultural-related endeavors. Today, that is no longer the case.

Join this effort to promote American agriculture to everyone during National Agriculture Day. For more information log onto www.agday.org.

Commissioner Sparks meets with Ag & Forestry LEADERS

The Alabama Agriculture & Forestry Leadership Development Program, also known as LEADERS, improves the leadership skills of program participants, who will be hopefully assuming higher leadership roles in their industries and local communities. The curriculum focuses on better understanding public policy and getting a broader view of the larger agricultural and forestry sector within the overall economy while also developing public speaking and communications skills. Recently, while participating in their third study institute LEADERS participants met with key political leaders in state government including Commissioner of Agriculture & Industries Ron Sparks. Pictured above are, Brian Hardin (Deatsville), Brad Brooks (Killen), Commissioner Sparks, Jennifer Wells (Dothan) and Rodney Rhodes (Brewton).

Marketing Opportunities for Organic Produce

The demand for organic and local produce is growing, and Grow Alabama is trying to meet the demand by providing a "sure" market for Alabama farmers. The statewide membership farm, sometimes called a "subscription farm," is catching hold in Alabama. Formerly known as Mt Laurel Organic Gardens with 200 member families in the Birmingham area, last year the program expanded statewide to 500 members. A membership of 1,000 is anticipated this year, with a crop plan worth almost $1 million to participating Alabama farmers.

It is the goal that all Grow Alabama produce be from Alabama and be organically grown. "The membership has the potential to grow into the thousands," says founder Jerry Spencer. "There's a similar program in Europe with over 60,000 members."

Grow Alabama's ultimate mission is to reverse the current ratio of foods grown in Alabama to the foods consumed in Alabama. At this time, over 90% of all produce consumed in Alabama comes from out of state. "What this could mean to the farmers of Alabama and to the state is hard to calculate, but it will be in the billions of dollars," says Spencer.

To reverse this trend is going to take a special marketing effort and management effort by Grow Alabama, and a growing effort on the part of farmers. The opportunity is there for larger farmers to experiment with a small acreage in organic production, and for smaller farmers to go fully organic, with Grow Alabama's "Get One Over the Bridge" program. In this program, the farmer will take 1 acre or more and, with support from Grow Alabama, produce an organically grown crop (not yet certified), which Grow Alabama will purchase at a premium price.

An at-the-farm pick-up system is also in the works, as is a production support system. OrganiCorps is a group of young people wanting to learn and support organic growing. They will spend several days per week working with the farmers as needed, learning farming techniques and supporting production -- planting, weeding, harvesting, post-harvest production, packing, pick-up and so forth.

"Alabama farmers are generally known for minimal chemical use," Spencer says. "For many, it would be a small step to become a certified organic producer. And they would be able to get 40-50% more for their efforts." According to the Organic Trade Association, organic produce sales have increased by 20% per year for the last 20 years. At that rate, 50% of the population will be buying organically grown produce by the year 2020.

going to meet the demands of a more sophisticated customer base. Making decisions to spend significant amounts of funding in economically challenging times takes political courage, but I believe that the benefit to Alabama tax payers far outweighs the political risks involved. It is the right thing to do. It will result in better service to farmers and agri-business consumers across Alabama not only tomorrow but for years to come.

Many exciting new features and services will be available to Alabama's agricultural and agri-business community as a result of the modernization efforts underway at the ADAI. Technology definitely will play a key role in Alabama's future and we intend to be ready for it.

The IT changes at the Alabama Department of Agriculture & Industries are bold and proactive. They are necessary if the department is inspectors to each farm marked within the circle to see if they were infected. Using GIS saves time and helps stop the spread of diseases more efficiently. Animal Identification and Premise ID systems are being planned to use GIS in this manner. In addition to these planned advances, the department will also unveil a new web page in the next two months.

DIAZINON BUY BACK- DEADLINE MARCH 31ST

Retailers of diazinon outdoor non-agricultural use products may bring their unopened unused products to their distributor for a refund. After March 31, retailers will be responsible for the safe storage and disposal of any remaining product.

As of December 31, 2004, the EPA discontinued the sale of diazinon insecticides for residential use. Consumers are allowed to use remaining stocks of diazinon products purchased before December 31, if they follow all label directions and precautions. For more information on diazinon products, or proper disposal of diazinon products, please contact Tony Cofer in Pesticide Management at 334/240-7237.

Grassland Reserve Program

Alabama has received $910,000 for financial assistance to landowners who participate in the USDA's Grassland Reserve Program. The Grassland Reserve Program (GRP) is a voluntary program provided by the federal government to help landowners, operators, farmers, and ranchers preserve grassland and keep their land in agriculture.

The GRP is administered by USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) and Farm Service Agency (FSA), in cooperation with the USDA Forest Service. The goal of the program is to protect two million acres of grassland, rangeland, shrubland, and pastureland by purchasing easements, entering into long-term rental agreements, and providing technical and financial support to participants. The GRP is available for land that has been predominantly grassland, forbs, and shrubs that has potential to provide an ecological habitat for animals or plants if protected. The programs emphasize protection for grasslands that are under threat of conversion to cropland or other uses.

Another conservation program provided by USDA is the Farm and Ranch Lands Protection Program (FRPP). The FRPP is intended to help farmers and ranchers keep their land in agriculture. The NRCS provides matching funds along with other conservation groups to purchase conservation easements. The program compensates landowners who agree to limit future development of their property for non-agricultural uses.

To find out eligibility information for participation in either land conservation program, please contact your local USDA Service Center, your local conservation district, or visit www.nrcs.usda.gov/programs/GRP.

many exports that will be sent to Cuba from Alabama because of the millions of dollars in contracts that were negotiated in 2004 alone," said Commissioner Ron Sparks. "We are so fortunate to have the Port of Mobile as a hub for shipping our local products. Not only have we been able to increase our sales to Cuba, Alabama will be able to benefit from the contracts made by other states because a large number of them will be required to ship goods out of the Port of Mobile."
